(1838), Repr., 1998. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. The individual petitions laid before Congress contained testimonials by friends, witnesses, and relatives; then there were statements supporting claims made by widows and children, statements identifying parents, corroborations of service records, affidavits of good character, and stories of personal misfortune. The list goes on and on. There is of course no guarantee that the subject of your research will be discovered in these pages, but in the leave no stone unturned category, this obscure government publication is a researcher's dream. Index. 519 pp. [5924-G].
