Hamilton, for example, we are intellectually necessitated to think that every new phenomenon must have previously existed in another form but not necessarily in this, that, or the other particular form; for a knowledge of which we are indebted to experience. 7 In other words, what the preceding form of any new phenomena actually was, has been determined by the Supreme Will, and is, in that sense, arbitrary. God is the proper cause of the antecedent and consequent forms or phenomena of existence being what we actually find them to be. seem to become philosophers to employ their thoughts (contrary to what some hold) about the final causes of things, =0 for, besides that this would prove a very pleasing entertainment to the mind, it might be of great advantage, in that it not only discovers to us the attributes of the Creator, but may also direct us in several instances to the proper uses and applications of things 5 and I must confess I see no reason why pointing out the various ends to which natural things are adapted, and for which they were originally with unspeakable wisdom contrived, should not be thought one good way of accounting for them, and altogether worthy a philosopher. Thirdly, from what has been premised no reason can be drawn why the history of nature should not still be studied, and observations and experiments made--which, that they are of use to...
